EQUIPPED FOR IMPACT

Why do employers seek Ford School graduates? For their ability to solve tough problems. Our students are prepared to analyze and evaluate policies, measure impacts, size up options, and lead—using an approach that integrates an understanding of political and regulatory environments with a full toolkit of quantitative and communication skills.

Our graduates work across all sectors, applying their skills to the world's most complex problems, including health care cost containment, education reform, energy planning, national security, poverty alleviation, and urban revitalization.

EMPLOYER QUOTES

"Mathematica Policy Research recruits Ford School graduates because we need people with a strong analytical skill set, a collaborative style, sound quantitative background, and good awareness of public policy challenges and initiatives. Ford School graduates have the drive to conduct rigorous, objective research to improve public well-being."

Mary Harrington (MPP '89)

Vice President and Director of Health Research, Mathematica Policy Research, Inc.

"The Ford School's commitment to applied learning, quantitative analysis, and communication skills is a major reason why we start our recruiting each year in Weill Hall. Comfort with data is essential. So too is the critical thinking made possible by empathy and listening. We have found the whole package time and again within the Ford School community."

James Devaney (MPP '05)

Director of Global Education and Advisory Services, Huron Consulting Group
